A new brewpub gets some buzz

FOOD & DRINK

Ex-Half Pints CEO crafting a unique venue

Metro | Winnipeg

A familiar face in Winnipeg's beer scene is brewing up something new and hopes to be among the first to open a brewpub in the city on the heels of changes to liquor laws.

Nicole Barry has signed a lease on an old machine shop, which was the former home of the Edge Skatepark at 125 Pacific Ave. She hopes to have Peg Beer Company — a 150-seat restaurant and brewery — open by Dec. 1.

"Since the legislation changes have happened, it's really more viable as a business opportunity," said Barry, explaining that the legal changes now allow beer made at the brewpub to be distributed outside the restaurant and alters the rules around how much revenue has to be made from food over alcohol.

"Things like that made it very restrictive.... Now we can sell growlers on site and we'll be doing a small retail store on site where you can buy merchandise and beer to go."

LEGISLATION

The Province of Manitoba announced a new craft-beer strategy in December to develop Manitoba's home-grown brewing industry. A committee struck at the time has been helping government craft new beer-friendly legislation.

Pints Brewing Company, plans on keeping the aesthetics of the old warehouse for the venture, including the exposed brick, ceiling beams and the graffiti added to the walls while it was a skatepark.

She said she wants a casual, family-friendly feel for the brewpub. It will have a menu offering various flatbreads and will feature glass walls so diners can look into both the kitchen and brewery side of the operation.

As for the beer, Barry tells Metro she will start off by offering two flagship beers — what they'll be, she says we'll have to wait and see — as well as a variety of seasonal beers throughout the year.

"I have been a part of the craft-beer industry ... for over a decade now," she said.

"What I'm most excited about is being able to share the passion and enthusiasm with Winnipeg."

Mammography service goes digital

Manitoba has begun to roll out a digital mammography program. The new, fully integrated mobile system will hopefully help achieve the province's goal of reducing the time between suspicion of cancer and treatment to under 60 days.

The program does away with film photos and, instead, mammogram images are stored digitally, providing access to health-care staff across the province in an instant. Also, all breast screening and diagnostic mammography sites will have the same equipment.

"Quality images captured in real time eliminate the need to transport film to radiologists for diagnosis and allows radiologists to consult with other health-care providers quickly and effectively," said Jim Slater, chief executive officer, Diagnostic Services Manitoba, in a news release. "This can reduce wait times, especially in cases where there is high suspicion of cancer."

The province is currently negotiating with a vendor to purchase equipment. Once that is complete, the program should be fully implemented within 10 months, according to the province. METRO

ART

Shakespeare classic coming to WAG

A special presentation of Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra is coming to the Winnipeg Art Gallery (WAG).

The performance will run alongside the gallery's current exhibition, Olympus: The Greco-Roman Collections of Berlin, with both matinée and evening performances on July 8 and 9.

Antony and Cleopatra follows the relationship of the titular characters from the time of the Sicilian revolt to the final war of the Roman Republic.

"The story of mature love and imperial conquest is full of passion, jealousy, war and poisonous death," said WAG in a statement.

Although the show takes place outside of the WAG's Olympus galleries, ticket purchasers will receive a stamp on their "Olympus Passport" allowing them to collect stamps to win prizes, including admission to the exhibition.

Olympus is Manitoba's first major exhibition of classical antiquities in over half a century.

Tickets to Antony and Cleopatra are available at olympus-wag.ca or at the WAG front desk.

Keith McCambridge welcomes opportunity

Dave Baxter
Metro | Winnipeg

The Manitoba Moose are coming home this fall, and when they do, it will be a very special homecoming for the man who will stand behind the bench.

Keith McCambridge has coached the St. John's IceCaps since 2011, but with the team set to move to Winnipeg, he will now be coaching the reincarnated Manitoba Moose.

McCambridge will definitely be familiar with his new home, as he was born in Thompson and grew up in Selkirk, playing his minor hockey in both Selkirk and Winnipeg.

"It's very rare in this business that you have an opportunity to coach in the province you were born in," said McCambridge. "So without a doubt this chance to come home is very exciting."

It's also a chance for him to stay close to family.

"My wife is from Selkirk, and my mom is still out in St. Andrews. It's a lot harder to help my mom from the middle of Newfoundland, so I can be around a lot more now."

McCambridge said he knows what kind of hockey fans he'll be coaching in front of next season, and he thinks having the Jets' primary affiliate play in Winnipeg is a big deal for those fans.

"You look at how passionate those fans are for the Winnipeg

Jets, and now the fans have the opportunity to see the young up-and-coming prospects, so that is something that will be exciting for both the fans as well as players and coaches.

"When you look at the players the Winnipeg Jets have drafted and picked up, it's now a situation where the right kind of players are in the system. And it takes time for players to get through the ranks, but fans should be excited about what we have here."

McCambridge said he and his family plan to move back to Winnipeg in mid-July.

WEATHER

No confirmation of tornadoes

Environment Canada is not confirming that the severe thunderstorms that rolled over Manitoba on Saturday included tornadoes.

"We never did receive reports of a touchdown yesterday," Environment Canada meteorologist Jason Knight said Sunday.

"This was an enormous storm, and even without a tornado, those 100-kilometre (per hour) winds and softball-sized hail are capable of inflicting enormous damage."

Knight said the weather service was able to get a warning out before the first system hit southwestern Manitoba around 2:10 p.m. The fast storm lasted an hour and covered Roseisle southeast down to the U.S. border at Haskett, said Knight.

There were no reports of injuries, but Environment Canada said the storm damaged crops and trees, left cars and homes with broken windows and punctured holes into house siding.

Knight said there were also no injuries in a second thunderstorm that started over River-ton around 4 p.m. and dropped quarter-sized hail over Winnipeg by 7:30 p.m.

Canadian midfielder to return to English league

They call her The Destroyer and Canadian midfielder Desiree Scott wears the badge proudly.

"I absolutely love it," she said. "I think it matches me perfectly."

"Most people wouldn't think a five-foot-two loving-hearted girl such as myself would get that nickname but I think my play on the field matches it. I feel sort of like a mini-super hero when I hear The Destroyer," she added, lowering her voice for The Destroyer part.

"It suits me very well."

The nickname came from coach John Herdman during the 2012 Olympic qualifiers.

"He did an interview after and he said 'How about that Desi Scott?' He just said 'She's destroying them out there.' And it just sort of struck from there."

The 27-year-old from Winnipeg plays holding midfielder, patrolling in front of the Canadian backline like a pit bull. Cross her at her peril. Crunching tackles are her bread and butter.

"That's what gets me excited," she said.

Eighth-ranked Canada lost 2-1 against No. 6 England on Saturday at B.C. Place Stadium before a crowd of 50,000-plus at B.C. Place Stadium.

enemy. Notts County Ladies FC teammates Alex Greenwood, Laura Bassett, Ellen White and Carly Telford are all part of the England squad.

Scott plans to return post-tournament to Notts County for the second half of the season. Circled on her calendar is the Aug. 1 Women's FA Cup final against Chelsea Ladies at Wembley Stadium.

Based on her first year's experience in England, she is happy with her decision to play there rather than return to the NWSL.

"I didn't know what to expect going over there," she said. "It's definitely competitive and a good-quality league and it's only improving."

I feel sort of like a mini-super hero when I hear The Destroyer.

Scott describes herself as a homebody, so the move overseas was out of character. But she figured she only had so many years of playing at the top level so why not make the most of them.

Scott got a taste of celebrity when she returned home to Winnipeg from the London

Olympics, where Canada won bronze.

Her mother had told her there might be few fans at the airport. But when she came down the escalator, she was surrounded by a crowd chanting her name.

"I was excited, I started crying, like I didn't know what to do. The support from my local fans there was unbelievable."

Scott played a key role in the bronze medal game against France, deflecting a shot that was headed at the Canadian goal.

Away from the pitch, the former University of Manitoba player is a certified Zumba instructor. In other words, she can shake a leg and work up a sweat.

"I love to dance," she said. "If I had not played soccer, I think I would have gone into dance."

Scott's pre-game routine is to dance, to get the nerves out.

She followed brother Nick into soccer. "I wanted to be like my big brother," she said.

"He's always said I'm living his dream," Scott added with a laugh.

Scott has won 94 caps since making her Canadian debut at age 22 in February 2010. She played in 49 consecutive Canadian matches from 2011 to 2014.

SCHOOL'S OUT

Ace goes on the record

WHAT'S GOOD

Ace Burpee

As school officially comes to end, I want two things on the record. One is good, the other is incredibly sad.

To all teachers, EAs, principals, VPs, etc: You are very much appreciated, even though some don't know it yet and won't realize for perhaps years to come. There's something kind of cool about delayed gratitude.

You're basically banking good karma.

Those who have been in the school system for a while will get it. Others, like teachers in their first year or two on the job, may be yet to see it, but it'll come. The kids you teach today are in many ways no different than when you were in their desks.

Sometimes it takes us a long, long time to appreciate what someone has done for us.

The way I remember my teachers today is much different than if I had been asked my feelings about them when I was in grade 10. Thanks for staying the course and not giving up on them or me. Someone somewhere reveres you. Trust me.

I'm as lost on this as anybody, but there's no way we can ignore it. We all remember vividly the tragedy at Garden City Collegiate involving two wonderful young students taking their own lives. Heartbreaking, and it's way worse than we think.

Since then, I know of at least six more such incidents, three taking place over the past few weeks.

These aren't in the news, nor should they be, and I won't reveal the schools. It's simply unfathomable, and it's every part of town. Kids from all backgrounds and situations taking their own lives. It's beyond tragic.

If there is anything positive to go on moving forward, it's that there are tons of high school students, parents, teachers, and community leaders who are well aware of the problem and are at least talking and searching for ways to help.

I'm all in, as are some of the brightest and most caring people I know. If you can be of any help at all, I'm easy to find. These kids are worth it.

MENTAL HEALTH NEEDS

45 new apartments on Molson Street

A new, 45-unit apartment block in northeast Winnipeg will help those with mental health needs and their families find a safe, affordable space to stay.

The new block, called Concordia Village IV, officially opened on Friday at the corner of Molson Street and Kimberly Avenue. It has 19 one-bedroom units, 14 two-bedroom units and 12 three-bedroom units and office space for program services.

The units include 22 affordable housing units leased at median market rates and 23 units with rent geared to income. Sixteen of the units will be available for those with mental health needs.

"We see safe, affordable housing as a fundamental right, integrated and appropriately resourced housing allows even the most vulnerable among us to recover good health, find meaningful employment and relationships in the community," said James Friesen, CEO of Eden Health Care Services, in a statement. City setting sights on illegal student housing

Low supply of homes affects international pupils most

Dave Baxter
Metro | Winnipeg

Coun. Janice Lukes made her case to the city's planning department Friday, asking the city to look for ways to combat illegal student housing operations being run near the University of Manitoba.

A number of homes in the area are owned by landlords who run student housing, and sometimes those properties have more than a dozen students living in them at one time, Lukes told the committee. "There is a limited supply and massive demand, and the demand is only growing as the university (of Manitoba) keeps expanding," said Lukes.

International students relocating to study in Winnipeg often struggle to find apartments that will accept them.

With limited options, they rent in illegal rooming houses because they are their only op-often tough to root out, particularly those involving high occupancy volumes in a single property.

"It's complex. Bylaw officers can't just walk into a home and say 'look what's going on in here?' But the bottom line is it's just not safe what's going on there."

She also told the committee can help her.

She said that evicting residents of the rooming houses won't solve the problem, it will just relocate it.

"You can evict but they are just going to pop up somewhere else," said Lukes.

Some members of council suggested that the problem couldn't be solved by council alone.

Coun. Russ Wyatt recommended a formal "working group" to bring students, the university and area residents together to deal with the issue collaboratively.

At Friday's meeting the committee accepted a detailed report containing information from the planning department on how other communities in North America deal with similar issues.

They offered no details on how they would move forward with the information in hand.

Victim's roommate charged after murder investigation

Winnipeg police have arrested Jason Stinson's roommate after Stinson was found dead on the banks of the Red River June 12.

On June 12 an off-duty police officer found the body of Stinson, 49, of Beausejour on the bank of the Red River around Lombard Avenue and Waterfront Drive. Police said he had been shot.

Police said he was also the victim of another assault on June 5 around 9 p.m. in the 900 block of Kildonan Drive.

"He did go to the hospital and I can tell you that his injuries were extensive and did require treatment," said Winnipeg Police spokesperson Const. Jason Michalyshen, addressing the June 5 assault.

Michalyshen said Stinson was released from hospital and police were investigating the assault prior to his murder.

He said there were no gunshot wounds in the first assault and his injuries appeared to be from a "physical assault."

Police said Friday Stinson and the suspect were drinking in Steven Juba Park during the day and were under a train bridge when they got into an argument that ended when the suspect pulled out a gun and shot Stinson in the upper body.

Police have arrested and charged Steven Anthony Morrisseau, 29, with second-degree murder in connection with the incident. METRO/WITH FILES FROM

Independent Jewellers approved for building

APPEAL

Initial plan rejected by planning department

Dave Baxter
Metro | Winnipeg

The city has overruled its planning department and will let Independent Jewellers build their new building the way they want it built, even though it does not comply with the area's secondary plan.

Independent Jewellers plans to level their existing building at the corner of Notre Dame Avenue and Isabel Street, and build a new one on the same property.

The new development would have a parking lot up against the sidewalk and then the new building behind that.

The existing plan for the neighbourhood calls for businesses to have their buildings up to the sidewalk and the parking lots behind them to make the area more pedestrian friendly, so their plan was rejected by the planning department, leading to an appeal of the decision on Friday.

A long line of people spoke at the meeting in favour of the development, including owners of other businesses in the area.

"There definitely was the neighbourhood support," said Coun. John Orlikow.

Independent Jewellers' owners said that in the last few years there have been three major vehicle accidents at the intersection where the store is, with one leading to a death, and all of them damaging the store.

Moving the building away from the corner would make the corner safer for pedestrians, according to the owners.

They also said they want to keep the "third generation" store in the West End despite the fact they could easily move to another location.

"Some councillors felt the historic nature of the building, and the owners of it, and their commitment to the West End was really important," said Orlikow.

Orlikow was asked why the city agreed to overrule the planning department even though the department was following secondary plan guidelines.

"We do have some policies and secondary plans in place, but when we boil it down to a specific building we have to contextualize it to that, in that moment."

Trans-Canada Highway crash leaves Winnipeg woman in critical condition

A Winnipeg woman is in hospital with serious injuries after a fiery multi-vehicle crash on the Trans-Canada Highway Friday.

The chain-reaction crash happened at Provincial Road 51 East, near Richer, just before 7:30 p.m. when a pickup truck rear-ended a car at high speeds while traffic slowed in a construction zone.

The first crash sent the car into the back of a trailer of an SUV, which in turn crashed into a van in front of it. Both the car and the SUV went up in flames.

The male driver of the SUV and three kids inside were able to escape from the fiery vehicle and the driver and others in the area were able to get the female driver of the car out of her burning vehicle.

The 38-year-old female driver of the van and her passengers were uninjured. The 45-year-old male driver of the SUV suffered minor injuries and was taken to local hospital. The children were uninjured. The 41-year-old female driver and lone occupant of the car suffered serious injuries. She was transported to Winnipeg hospital, where she remains in critical condition. The 32-year-old female driver of the truck and her passenger suffered minor injuries and were taken to a local hospital.

Narrated by actor Ewan McGregor of Star Wars fame, the show has the highest production values the planetarium has ever presented, said Scott Young, museum spokesperson.

"The show really gives the viewer a good sense of the

The show runs twice daily and is suitable for all ages.

Other third parties should follow HarperPAC's lead, close up shop: Kingsley

Canada's former chief electoral officer applauded the abrupt end of a controversial Conservative political action committee Friday and called on similar third-party groups to shut their doors as well.

Jean-Pierre Kingsley said he was "very happy" to learn the group known as HarperPAC had shut down, and said he believes others — including the left-leaning Engage Canada — ought to follow suit.

The website for HarperPAC disappeared Thursday after a party spokesman publicly criticized the group — particularly its choice of name.

"I think they should all shut down," Kingsley said.

"Wait for the writ to be dropped and then register as a third party as you're supposed to."

He has expressed fear that Canada has been going down a path similar to the U.S., where political action committees raise huge sums of money to influence outcomes. THE CANADIAN PRESS

RESEARCH

Path to jihadism varies

A federally funded study of young people who embraced radical jihadism found they had little else in common, suggesting efforts to discourage extremism must be flexible and tailored to individual cases.

Terrorist Chatter: Understanding What Terrorists Talk About, examined the online activities of seven men who were born or raised in the U.S. and were active in the jihadist scene.

All seven were either convicted of terrorism-related offences or, in two cases, killed in extremist-related incidents.

The study by U.S. firm Flashpoint was funded through the federal government's Kanishka program, a terrorism research effort led by Public Safety Canada.

Flashpoint compiled 1,871 online posts written by the men in open forums over several years.

The researchers stress their work cannot claim to be a complete analysis of the views of the seven men, let alone a comprehensive overview of what all terrorists discuss and believe.

But they hope it will help guide authorities in devising counter-radicalization programs.

The authors say radicalization is a highly complex and individualized process, often shaped by a poorly understood mix of factors.

While all seven subjects shared a common background, it appeared from their online activities that their interests, views and approaches were highly varied. Some were focused on religion, while others were more into politics. Some immediately adopted a jihadist mindset and others took much longer.

"Given this diversity, it becomes obvious that any counter-radicalization needs to be tailored to the specifics of the case. Flexibility is the name of the game." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ukrainians clamour for Canadian TV shows

MEDIA

Pulling Russian content leads to gaps in programming

The Littlest Hobo, Anne of Green Gables, maybe even Flashpoint could find a new lease on life in Ukraine as the country's broadcasting council scrambles to fill TV screens with something other than Russian programming, says a senior Ukrainian official.

To counter both real and perceived propaganda throughout the war-torn country, President Petro Poroshenko's government pulled the plug on the Russian signals, leaving a dramatic hole in entertainment and information schedules, said Iurii Artemenko.

The country needs both replacement programming and hardware to improve its own radio and television signals.

Artemenko recently returned from a trip to South Korea, where he was pleading for content.

"We need high-quality content, shows, dramas, movies, cultural programs," he said at the same time as expressing his fondness for Quebec cinema.

BACKGROUND

Among the first targets of Russian special forces in the takeover of Crimea were the TV stations and broadcast outlets, which have now blocked all forms of Ukrainian programming

Artemenko says Canadian programs — dramas and comedies — would be an important uplift for an anxious population.

In terms of equipment, Ukraine "doesn't need money, but tuners and transmitters" to increase coverage in border regions.

The Russians, he said, use television very effectively to incite unrest in the East, claiming that actors are interviewed for news programs and fabricate stories of Ukrainian atrocities.

Information is still freely available on the Internet and Artemenko says there's been no attempt to block or censor online feeds — something the former journalist says he would oppose.

"I am journalist, my first profession, and I respect journalism, but I can give you lots of examples of Russian propaganda," he said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Architectural professionals and community groups are going to court to halt work on a controversial monument to victims of communism.

The groups have begun an application in Federal Court challenging the National Capital Commission's decision to break ground for the project.

The lawsuit by the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada, Heritage Ottawa, and architects Barry Padolsky and Shirley Blumberg alleges that the NCC violated its own procedures and acted illegally in deciding to prepare the monument site, despite having no finalized and approved design for it.

The monument has sparked controversy because it is seen as an ideologically driven project by the Harper government that would be out of sync with its surroundings.

The NCC — an unelected body of federal appointees that oversees land in and around the capital — has ten days to oppose the application.

The commission said Thursday that the monument would occupy about two-thirds the space on a prime piece of land near the Supreme Court of Canada than originally planned, and would only be half as tall.

Legal action was necessary, the groups said in a statement, not because of opposition to the monument itself, but because it's a bad location and the NCC didn't hold proper public consultations before going ahead with the project.

"The applicants do not oppose the commemorative intent of the memorial and believe that other appropriate sites exist," the groups said in a news release.

"They are concerned that the precipitous decision of the NCC to approve groundbreaking runs contrary to the National Capital Act and the long-term vision and plan for the district. They believe that any such decision requires meaningful public consultation given the significance of the site to Canada's heritage and democracy."

The Harper government wants the monument constructed on land adjacent to the high court that was originally set aside for a new Federal Court building.

Pride parades take on a celebratory tone

Rainbows and good cheer were out in force Sunday as hundreds of thousands of people packed gay pride events from Seattle to New York City, where the governor officiated at a wedding, just days after the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark ruling legalizing same-sex marriage.

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo made use of some newly granted powers by officiating at the wedding ceremony of a same-sex couple in Manhattan in front of the Stonewall Inn, where years ago gay bar patrons stood up to a police raid. New York state legalized same-sex marriage in 2011.

State law did not allow Cuomo to officiate at wedding ceremonies until last week. The authority to do so was granted as part of a slew of legislation passed days ago.

This year, parades are taking on a more celebratory tone.

Organizers of San Francisco's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Pride Parade, just called Pride, expected about a million revellers. It had 240 groups marching in the parade and more than 30 floats, its largest in 45 years.

"It's going to be an epic weekend," echoed David Studinski, march director for New York City Pride on Friday. "I actually just wrote on Twitter that this is the most historic Pride march since the first." New York City expected 22,000 people marching along a three-kilometre route and more than two million people to visit throughout the day.

At gay pride parades in Dublin, Paris and other cities Saturday, the U.S. ruling was hailed by many as a watershed.

"Soon in all countries we will be able to marry," said Celine Schlewitz, a 25-year-old nurse taking part in the Paris parade. "Finally a freedom for everyone."

GLOBAL POLITICS

Marriage ruling likely to have ripple effect

Around the world, gay rights advocates are saying the U.S. ruling on gay marriage may help change attitudes, just as American activists — and judges, educators and legislators — had earlier been influenced by the easy acceptance of same-sex marriage in some European countries.

In the Philippines, activists seeking to win legal recognition for same-sex marriages believe the U.S. ruling will be useful, particularly since the country's legal setup is largely based on the U.S. system, said Sylvia Estrada Claudio, a gender rights advocate and professor at the University of the Philippines.

"This ruling will have positive repercussions for our own movements here," she said.

The Philippines' civil code limits marriage to a union between a man and a woman — but the constitutionality of this proviso is being challenged by a lawyer, Jesus Nicardo Falcis III.

CONSTABLE, NEW YORK

Three weeks after escape, Sweat nabbed near border

The second of two convicted murderers who staged a brazen escape three weeks ago from a maximum-security prison in northern New York was shot and captured near the Canadian border on Sunday. The incident happened two days after David Sweat's fellow inmate was killed in a confrontation with law enforcement, state police said.

A trooper shot the convict in the town of Constable, about three kilometres south of the Canadian border and 48 km from the prison, after spotting a suspicious man walking down a road Sunday afternoon, state police said. Sweat was taken into police custody and transported to a hospital for treatment of his injuries, they said. His condition was not immediately known.

State police did not immediately say why the trooper fired at Sweat or whether he was armed. Fellow inmate Richard Matt was killed Friday afternoon during an encounter with border patrol agents when he failed to respond to an order to raise his hands.

According to U.S. Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., federal law enforcement said Sweat was shot twice and coughing up blood as he was taken to a hospital. He said no officers were believed to be injured.

Matt and Sweat used power tools to saw through a steel cell wall and several steel steam pipes, bashed a hole through a two-foot-thick brick wall, squirmed through pipes and emerged from a manhole outside the Clinton Correctional Facility in Dannemora on June 6.

Sweat was serving a sentence of life without parole in the killing of a sheriff's deputy in Broome County in 2002. Matt was serving 25 years to life for the killing and dismembering of his former boss. They were added to the U.S. Marshals Service's 15 Most Wanted fugitives list two weeks after getting away.

NASA

Launch to space station ends in failure

An unmanned SpaceX rocket carrying supplies and a first-of-its-kind docking port to the International Space Station broke apart Sunday shortly after liftoff. It was a severe blow to NASA, still reeling from previous failed shipments.

The accident happened about 2-1/2 minutes into the flight from Cape Canaveral, Florida. A billowing white cloud emerged in the sky, growing bigger and bigger, then fiery plumes shot out of where the rocket was supposed to be, and pieces could be seen falling into the Atlantic. More than 2,360 kilograms of space station cargo were on board, including the first docking port designed for future commercial crew capsules. No astronauts were on board.

The rocket shattered while travelling at 4,670 km/h, about 43 kilometres up. Everything appeared to go well in the flight until the rocket went supersonic.

SpaceX founder and chief executive Elon Musk later said an over pressurization occurred in the liquid-oxygen tank of the rocket's upper stage.

SpaceX President Gwynne Shotwell assured reporters, at an early afternoon news conference, that the company will fix the problem — "and get back to flight." She declined to speculate on what it would take to resume launches. She said the company had followed all procedures with respect to safety.

Losing this shipment — which included replacements for items lost in two previous failed supply flights — was a huge setback for NASA. The space agency is counting on private industry to transport cargo — and eventually astronauts — to the orbiting lab. The California-based SpaceX is one of the contenders.

"This is a tough day," said

NASA's top spaceflight official, William Gerstenmaier. He said there was nothing common to the three accidents, "other than it's space and it's difficult to go fly."

This is the second failed station shipment in a row and the third in eight months.

NASA Administrator Charles Bolden stressed that the space station crew is in no immediate trouble because of this latest loss. NASA's space station program manager, Mike Suffredini, said the outpost had enough supplies on board to make it to October or so. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cheap solar imports need tariffs: Businesses

A band of small Canadian solar-panel manufacturers is banking on an upcoming trade decision in hopes of surviving an onslaught of low-priced Chinese imports.

The four Ontario companies said they hope a decision next week by Canada's International Trade Tribunal will uphold duties on imports they say are priced below the Chinese companies' actual cost of production.

"The best outcome for Ontario, for the entire solar community, is that there's a level playing field," says Geoff Atkins, who's in charge of business development for Silfab Solar in Mississauga.

"Obviously, if there are tariffs imposed that balance that playing field, that's certainly going to strengthen our position."

The counter argument: anti-dumping tariffs on Chinese imports would keep Canadian prices higher and make it more difficult to eliminate the gap between the cost of producing solar power and the price of buying electricity off the power grid.

But Atkins and others in Canada's young solar manufacturing sector said Canada should follow the lead of the European Union and United States, which have already imposed tariffs on Chinese imports that allegedly violate international trading rules.

Sears turnaround is 'improbable': Expert

Time is running out for struggling department store chain Sears Canada to improve its financial results, and the chances of survival are slim, says one retail analyst.

Keith Howlett of Desjardins published a report Friday saying it's "now or never" for the money-losing company to make headway on a turnaround that has dragged on for several years with little progress.

"The next seven quarters are 'make it or break it' for Sears Canada," he wrote. "Our current view is that an operating turnaround is improbable."

Howlett's prediction suggests the fate of the company will be determined some time around the 2016 holiday shopping season. The company declined to comment on the analyst report.

Last month, Sears Canada Inc. posted a $59.1-million net loss for the first quarter as revenues dropped 9.7 per cent from the same period a year earlier.

European bailout set to expire Tuesday

Greece's five-year financial crisis took its most dramatic turn to date Sunday, with the prime minister announcing Greek banks would remain shut indefinitely and restrictions would be imposed on cash withdrawals.

The decision came on the recommendation of the Bank of Greece, Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras said during a televised address. He didn't immediately say what types of capital controls would be imposed.

The developments have thrown into question Greece's financial future and continued membership in the 19-state shared euro currency — and even the European Union.

For the past two days, Greeks have been rushing to ATMs to withdraw money following Tsipras' sudden weekend decision to call a referendum on creditor proposals for Greek reforms in return for vital bailout funds.

The referendum decision, which was ratified by parliament after a marathon 13-hour session

Looks like many Americans are on track to bankrupt their love lives. A survey of 1,051 upper middle-class couples (married and unmarried, same- and opposite-sex) published in The Associated Press found 36 per cent of partners disagreed about how much money they had to invest. Forty-three per cent didn't know how much their partner earned. Of those, 10 per cent were off by $25,000 or more, proving talking about money is still taboo. We must pay the water bill we owe Shoal Lake

INSIDE THE PERIMETER

Shannon VanRaes

This morning, I turned on my bathroom faucet and took a shower, gave a tap a twist and brushed my teeth, then turned on the dishwasher.

The coup de grâce? I got into my truck, pulled out onto a paved road and drove into downtown Winnipeg. But heck, if I'd wanted to I could have hit the Trans-Canada and gone anywhere.

It seems so simple, so obvious, so Canadian that it doesn't need to be mentioned. Only it does, because for some Canadians none of these things are possible.

Just 180 kilometres east of Winnipeg, on the Manitoba-Ontario border, is Shoal Lake 40 First Nation. For 17 years the community has been under a boil water advisory, despite having supplied Winnipeg with clean drinking water for a century. After being relocated to a man-made island and having 3,000 acres of its land given to the City of Winnipeg in 1912-1919, the community was left relying on ferries and winter roads to reach the outside world.

Winnipeg might consider, in light of its sole reliance on Shoal Lake for water, flowing a little more than $4 million in its direction.

For a brief moment last week, it seemed all three levels of government would fund the bridges and 28 kilometres of all-weather road Shoal Lake needs to reach the Trans-Canada highway and, by extension, anywhere else. The City of Winnipeg pledged $4 million and the governments of Ontario and Manitoba agreed to funding, assuming the federal government would give $10 million. It refused. Instead it offered $1 million for a design study. The estimated total cost for the bridges and road, which would also allow Shoal Lake 40 to move towards building a new water treatment facility, is $30 million.

What projects do garner that kind of cash? Memorial to victims of communism: $6 million. Investors Group Field: $208.5 million. Human Rights Museum: $351 million. Et cetera.

Refusing to provide Shoal Lake 40 with clean drinking water and a permanent road isn't about cost. It's about priorities. It says indigenous people aren't a priority for the federal government.

But while it was Ottawa that signed Treaty No. 3, nothing is stopping Manitoba from stepping up with a contribution recognizing that 50 per cent of the province's population drinks water from Shoal Lake. Likewise, Winnipeg might consider, in light of its sole reliance on Shoal Lake for water, flowing a little more than $4 million in Shoal Lake's direction. Forty dollars from each Winnipegger could solve the problem, too. The answer should be common sense. We've been running up a tab for years and now somebody has to pick up the bill.

The next time you whine, Millennials, thank Generation X

Tim Queregensser
Metro | Edmonton

I was born in 1977. Three years later, I'd have been a Millennial: I wish. I had no idea I was in Gen X until Gen Y (a.k.a. Millennials) became a thing. Only then did I start hearing how this new generation had it tough: bleaker job prospects than their parents, unpaid internships, student debt from multiple degrees that opened few doors, and, of course, the likelihood that when it's time to rely on the social safety net, we'll fall through.

We hear this daily, but there are reasons it's now and not during the 1990s and early 2000s, when Gen Xers like myself faced the same challenges.

Partly, it's numbers. Generation Xers (born from the mid-1960s to 1980) will outnumber baby boomers (1945-1960) by 2028, when, thanks to age or death, there will be about 64 million of us in the U.S. (there are no such numbers for Canada). This is a hollow victory. The Gen Ys (born between 1980 and the turn of the century) are overtaking boomers now.

As Gen Xers, that tiny generation with Kurt Cobain and Jerry Seinfeld as our symbols, we're used to this. When it's less advantageous to be young, we are; when more advantageous, we're not. Indeed, if generations were a fashion, we'd be MC Hammer's pants.

Consider: In my early 20s, the boomers were clinging to their jobs with death grips and, despite my talent and ambition, I was told I was "too young" and needed experience.

So I moved across Canada and then the world for work. By my 30s, after several awards and achievements, I was "too old" for jobs opening up, all of them focused on new media. Apparently, at 32, I already didn't get Twitter (according to boomer managers). I feel you, Gen Y. But next time you whine, say thanks to Gen X.

We lived as latchkey kids resulting in your parents overcompensating to parent you properly (or, from my view, helicopter over you).

We paved the counterculture path now bearing fruit for Gen Y. We took to technology and told our bosses the web mattered and social media shouldn't be ignored.

And we saw we were living lives opposite to our parents — a childhood of wealth and opportunity, a mid- and later-life prospect of struggle. And it was us who said, "Not cool." I've yet to hear Gen X mentioned by Gen Y, other than to group me into the ultimate dismissal: old.

A lobby group called Generation Squeeze, which began at the University of British Columbia, gets my view. To them, Gen X and Gen Y are pretty much the same — screwed. Governments across Canada spend $12,000 per capita on benefits and services for people under 45. For those over 45, mostly boomers, it's $33,000. So, we're in the same boat, Gen Y. Gen X has just been here longer. And so we say, "Welcome."

Rosemary Westwood will return Tuesday.

Native group of seven

The findings of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission have brought native issues to the fore, with many reconsidering the role of First Nations people in Canadian history. One show, on at the McMichael Canadian Art Collection, in Kleinberg (just north of Toronto), puts this history front and centre by celebrating the art of seven native artists, who, in 1970s Winnipeg, fought for recognition. Catherine Kustanczy FOR METRO LIFE

The artists

Known officially as the Professional Native Indian Artists Inc. (PNIAI), the group — Norval Morrisseau, Daphne Odjig, Jackson Beardy, Eddy Cobiness, Alex Janvier, Carl Ray and Joseph Sanchez — was a direct response to the celebrated Group of Seven painters, famous in the early 20th century for their depictions of the Canadian wilderness.

The show

The show, 7: Professional Native Indian Artists Inc., originated at the MacKenzie Art Gallery in Regina, and was curated by First Nations artist/curator/educator Michelle LaVallee. Comprising close to 100 pieces in total, the show features a range of styles expressed in large-scale paintings as well as drawings and sketches.

Many have a contemporary feel, with Odjig and Janvier's works freely incorporating elements of street art and abstraction, while Sanchez's sketches bring to mind modern comics art.

"Daphne Odjig was told her art (shown far right) was either too native or not native enough," says Victoria Dickenson, executive director and CEO of the McMichael. "She felt (the establishment) was trying to place her in a box with this attitude of, 'You're not crafty enough for native art.'"

Many of the works in the exhibit depict native mythologies, personal stories and experiences, as well as historical injustices, with various pieces grouped under themes relating to storytelling. The works are particularly poignant in light of the Truth and Reconciliation Report.

"You have to embrace the whole history of our country," Dickenson says. "And these artists are a part of the history of our country. So this history is a part of you. It's history through art, through events, through its people."

Three tips to get your life on track after school

Vania Andre
Metro | New York City

Graduation is the end of one journey and the beginning of another. However, if you're one of the many graduates who find themselves in a post-college or post-university "mid-life" crisis, fear not. We asked Lindsey Pollak, millennial workplace expert and author of Becoming the Boss: New Rules for the Next Generation of Leaders, for tips on how to avoid sinking into depression after school.

Don't get down on yourself

Think about what you've just achieved. Graduation is a major accomplishment — one that should be celebrated. Remember that it is normal and understandable to compare your post-grad situation to your peers', which is why it's important to seek out colleagues who can not only offer encouragement, but also empathy.

"Find friends in a similar situations and connect with them regularly," says Pollak. Together you can complain but also "encourage each other and serve as accountability partners and sounding boards."

Use downtime wisely

Use the extra downtime as an opportunity to network and join local chapters of professional associations. Not only will you be working on advancing your career, but you will also be having fun doing it. Professional organizations typically host networking mixers,

Often, once you do a small task you will keep the momentum going.

Millennial workplace expert Lindsey Pollak where like-minded people can connect and share their resources.

Pollak suggests reaching out to your alma mater's career centre and alumni groups.

"The career centre can be a key contact because it spends time every single day building relationships with local, national and international employers in fields across the board," she says. "Set up a one-on-one appointment to review your résumé, take a career assessment test and practice a mock interview."

Alumni, on the other hand, have experience with the local market, she says. "They are often more than happy to help a young alum of their alma mater."

Stay active

It can be easy to fall in a slump when you're unemployed. Fight the urge to sloth your day away by taking small steps toward big goals.

"Break up a big task into small action items," she says. "Convince yourself to send a single networking email, revise one bullet point on your resume, or apply to one job on LinkedIn each day. Often once you do one small task, you will keep the momentum going and do a lot more."

Think about what direction you want your life to go in. Ask yourself, what type of company you would like to work for? Or, if furthering your education is an option, and if so, what type of program?

"It can be motivating to determine what benefits make your dream job your dream job," Pollak says.

"If you're currently employed, figure out exactly what you would like to change about your job and what benefits you would like your next job to offer. If you're looking for your first job, look beyond your paycheck: Consider benefits as part of your total compensation."

Unemployment hits everyone hard; however, for recent grads, it can be particularly unsettling because you're in a time of your life where you're forging your path as an adult. The feelings of inadequacy and lack of confidence are ones that should be used to motivate instead of discourage.

OFFICE POOL PARTY

Make the kind of splash that won't leave your career all wet

OFFICE RELATIONS

Eleni Deacon

Sticky weather calls for picnics, barbecues and beach days. But when your office decides to take their party poolside, it can feel like a sticky situation. What type clothing is appropriate, and will your boss be annoyed if you micro-manage the grill? Here's how to stay afloat during out-of-office summer social events.

There's no hard rule dictating what employees should wear to the pool. But if your organization has chosen to hold their shindig next to a swimmable body of water, one thing is certain: It's okay to wear a bathing suit. The type of suit will depend on your industry, the culture of your office, and your own preferences. If you're new to your workplace and the event is an annual affair, ask a trusted colleague about standard attire. This will reduce fretting in the leadup and ensure your pool wear is on-point.

Opt for a higher level of coverage than you might with friends, and stay far away from malfunction-prone ensembles. Although it's important to feel comfortable in your swimwear, it's polite to keep the comfort of others in mind, as well.

And while swimming should not be frowned upon, this is not the locale to lounge for hours on a deck chair. Skip tanning in favour of a coverup that you can slip on as soon as you've dried off.

You may feel pressure to join the water polo game, but if splashing around with co-workers makes you uneasy, there's a simple solution: Don't. Instead, focus on being a gracious guest. During parties held at a colleague's house, compliment the setup, offer to help (without taking over), and thank the host before heading home. It may be tempting to stick to your clique, but off-site gatherings are an opportunity to get to know colleagues outside your niche. Be friendly on land, and no one will care — or notice — that you've opted out of taking the plunge.

When it comes to summertime office gatherings, think through your approach but don't overthink. Parties are a break from work, and should not cause more stress than your job.

For the third time in six seasons, LeBron James is an unrestricted free agent.

The difference this time is he has no plans to move again.

The Cleveland star will not exercise a $21.6 million option on his contract for next season, a person with knowledge of the decision told The Associated Press.

The approach allows James to sign a new maximum contract that will pay him more than he would have made under his previous contract. His maximum number for next season, which is tied to how high the salary cap rises, is expected to be more than $22 million.

Jansen Harkins follows father's path

NHL DRAFT

Centre, son of ex-Flame Todd, picked 47th overall

The Harkins family knows how to be patient at the NHL Draft.

Jansen Harkins was selected in the second round by the Winnipeg Jets on Saturday, slipping to 47th overall, below his projected draft position.

Harkins' father Todd was drafted 44th overall by the Calgary Flames in 1988 and went on to play a brief NHL career before moving on to the IHL and Europe. The senior Harkins is now the general manager of the Prince George Cougars of the Western Hockey League, where his son played his junior hockey.

"He kind of prepared me a little bit," said Jansen Harkins.

Throughout hockey he's always been there for me.

The 18-year-old Harkins had 20 goals and 59 assists for Prince George last season. He also had three goals and two assists for Canada at the under-18 world championships. Most projections had Harkins going in the first round, including NHL Central Scouting, which had him ranked No. 15 among North American skaters.

"Sometimes there's players that are ranked higher throughout the different rankings that for whatever reason fall into your lap," said Jets general manager Kevin Cheveldayoff. "He's a skilled centreman."

Roughriders lose QB Durant for season

Kevin Glenn was supposed to be the Saskatchewan Roughriders' backup quarterback this season. Less than two quarters into the 2015 campaign, Glenn was thrust into the starter's role, a position he'll continue after starter Darian Durant suffered a season-ending injury on Saturday.

"I know he's out," noted Roughriders coach Corey Chamblin, whose team dropped a 30-26 decision to the Winnipeg Blue Bombers in the regular-season opener for both teams.

Durant was seen leaving Mosaic Stadium on crutches midway through the fourth quarter with a protective boot on his left foot. The team later announced that he suffered a ruptured Achilles tendon and will miss the rest of the season.

Saskatchewan fans and Durant's teammates watched the star quarterback get carted off the field with 37 seconds remaining in the second quarter, trailing 15-14. Durant wasn't touched on the play — an incomplete pass attempt to Jamel Richardson. It appeared as though Durant landed awkwardly on his left foot after he released the pass.

Chamblin said Durant couldn't put any pressure on the injured foot.

"It's really tough to see that happen. I talk to Darian all the time, and he's like an older brother to me," said Bombers quarterback Drew Willy, a former backup behind Durant. "Darian took me under his wing when I first came up here, so to see him go down is really hard for me."

Willy carved up the Roughriders' defence, especially in the second half.

He connected with slot-back Nick Moore, who made a sliding catch on an 18-yard touchdown strike, one that put Winnipeg ahead with seven minutes remaining in the fourth quarter.

Willy finished the day 22-for-25 passing for 325 yards and three touchdowns.

Injured Eskimos QB Reilly facing indefinite layoff

Edmonton Eskimos quarterback Mike Reilly is out indefinitely with a left knee injury.

The Eskimos updated Reilly's status Sunday after he left Saturday's game against Toronto in the fourth quarter. The Eskimos said Reilly will undergo tests this week to determine the extent of the injury. He completed 16 of 28 passing for 170 yards, a touchdown and an interception against Toronto before being replaced by backup Matt Nichols with about three minutes to go in the game.

Reilly was a big part of Edmonton's resurgent 2014 season. He threw for 3,327 yards and 16 touchdowns and rushed for 616 yards and eight TDs as he helped Edmonton to a 12-6 record and a spot in the CFL Western final, where the Eskimos lost to the Grey Cup champion Calgary Stampeders. RECIPE Pita-Stuffed Pizza Burgers

EAT LIGHT AT HOME

Rose Reisman
rosereisman.com

Burgers, tomato and sauce make a great combo in a warm pita. Serves four.

Ready in

Prep time: 10 minutes

Cook time: 8 minutes

Ingredients

- 1 lb lean ground beef
- 1 egg
- 1 tsp minced garlic
- 3 Tbsp finely chopped onion
- 3 Tbsp ketchup
- 3 Tbsp bread crumbs
- Salt and pepper
- 1/2 tsp dried basil
- 3/4 cup tomato sauce
- 1/2 cup grated mozzarella cheese
- 1/2 cup baby spinach leaves
- 2 large whole wheat pitas (gently heated)

Directions

1. Combine beef, egg, garlic, onion, ketchup, bread crumbs, salt, pepper and basil in bowl. Mix just until all is incorporated. Pat into four burgers. Either grill or sauté on a medium-high heat, just until cooked through or temperature reaches 160 F, about eight minutes.
2. Slice pitas in half, warm in microwave or oven and place burger inside each half. Divide tomato sauce into pitas, add spinach to side and top with cheese. Serve warm.

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
You are thinking about making big changes. However, you should wait until Thursday's full moon has come and gone. Chances are you won't have to change much at all.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You may find it easy to point the finger at other people but before you do make sure there are no skeletons in your own closet that might be dragged out for the world to see. No one is perfect!

Gemini May 22 - June 21
At some stage this week you will have to admit that some of your ideas are too outrageous to be taken seriously. But others will work and it is those you must focus on.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
You have a great deal of energy at your disposal now but will you use it wisely? There is a real danger that you could squander your resources on things that bring no lasting benefit. Focus on essentials.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
If something does not work out the way you intended it to today your first instinct will be to drop it and move on to something else. Finish what you started.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
If you assume that the people you have to deal with are as reasonable as you then you put yourself at a disadvantage. That applies to affairs of the heart as well as business matters.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Don't make any important decisions until the approaching full moon begins to wane towards the end of the week.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Over the next few days you will be tempted to believe you are heading in completely the wrong direction. It could just be the moon playing tricks on your mind.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Because the approaching full moon takes place in the money area of your chart there is a danger that you will waste what you have gained in recent weeks. Be especially careful when socializing. Don't spend money just to impress your friends.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You may be more emotional than usual over the next few days and that could cause problems if it leads you to behave in ways that undermine your relationships.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Big things won't worry you this week but little things are likely to annoy you a lot. The approaching full moon will tend to exaggerate the importance of what's going on.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
The excessive side of your personality is likely to come out this week, especially when the moon is full. If you do go over the top in some way, make amends as quickly as you can.
